A translated text should be the site where a different culture emerges, where a reader gets a glimpse of a culture other, and resistency, a translation strategy based on an aesthetic of discontinuity, can best preserve that difference, that otherness.

Do mgur have formal properties?

Do those properties change according to context?

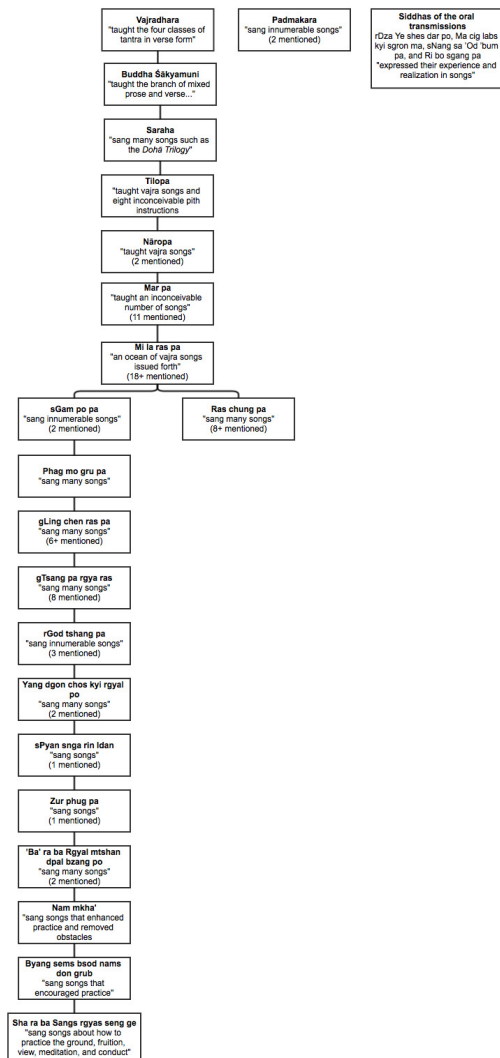

How are those properties understood to make mgur effective for both composer/singer and listener/reader?

What are the sources for these views?

“Having eliminated these activities, those of superior capacity listen to the meaning of the ground, fruition, and view, while those of intermediate capacity, who are involved in practicing meditation and conduct of the path, listen to the prosody of the lyrics. Those of inferior capacity stare at the mouth of the singer, slack-jawed and tongue drooping, they listen to the changing notes of the lyrics. You should listen in the manner of both superior and medium capacities.” (2b)

“First, when the song begins with the opening support (mgo 'dren), it should be elevated and majestic. In the middle, the words that express its subject matter should be clear and unadorned; the metaphors and their meaning should be well matched and easy to understand; the tone should be charming and the melody complete; and the voice should be powerful and magnificent. When the song concludes it should be gentle with an easy end. Moreover, the beginning of the song is elevated and majestic like the upper body of a lion. Its middle part is magnificent and firm like a golden vajra. The end of the song is long with an easy end, like the tail of a tiger.” (3b)

“First, supplications and praises form the song’s opening support. In the middle, stories and their rationale form the song’s liturgical framework, an outline together with introductions show how a song is put together, and time markers together with sections keep it to the proper length. Prayers of auspiciousness and aspiration form the song’s conclusion.” (3b)

“These songs that were sung by siddhas of the past may here be understood in the following way. They are a breeze that dispels the drowsiness and torpor of meditators. They are iron hooks that rein in scattered and agitated mind, bringing forth experience and realization. They remove obstacles for those who suffer. They enhance well-being for those who are happy. They are heart-advice that encourages the faithful to practice dharma. They are the intended meaning of the victors of the three times. They are lamps that dispel the darkness of ignorance. They are rivers that purify the latencies of the two obscurations. They are bonfires that consume the firewood of a belief in a self....” (7b)

“Concerning the sayings of the lamas of the past ... they are provisions when wandering in charnel grounds and holy places, necessities when roaming savage lands and mountain retreats, offerings when meeting lamas, gifts when encountering dharma brothers, offering articles when visiting temples and stūpas, goods when traveling around the countryside, ferry-fees when crossing rivers, offering gifts for requests to kings, an axe for chipping away alms from the wealthy and a file for scraping away alms from the poor. Even when meeting bandits we reply in song, and on such occasions the advice should be an exhortation to practice virtue.” (8b)

2. Songs about the ways in which experience and realization arise having meditated on the lama's instructions
སྤྱོད་མཁེ་གདམས་ངག་བསྐྱེད་ནས་ཉམས་རྟོགས་འབྱུངས་ཚུལ་གི་མགུར་

3. Songs that encourage fortunate individuals to practice dharma
སྐལ་ལྷན་གྱི་རྣམས་ཚོས་ལ་བསྐྱེད་པའི་མགུར་

4. Songs of instruction in the form of encouragement to oneself and advice to others
རང་ལ་བསྐྱེད་མ་དང་གཞན་ལ་བསྐྱེད་བྱའི་ཚུལ་དུ་གདམས་པའི་མགུར་

5. Songs that teach the dharma in accordance with whatever one's patrons, disciples, and followers request

རང་གི་ཡོན་བདག་དང་བུ་སློབ་ཉ་མ་རྣམས་ཀྱིས་ལུས་པ་བཞིན་གང་ལ་གང་མཐུན་གྱི་ཚོས་གསུང་བའི་མགུར་

6. Songs that chastise the wrongdoing of monks who do not abide by proper ethical conduct

སྤོང་པ་ཚུལ་བྲིམས་ལ་མི་གནས་པའི་སེར་མོ་བ་རྣམས་ཀྱི་མཚང་འབྲིན་པའི་མགུར་

7. Songs that function as a form of communication to one's lama and disciples

རང་གི་བླ་མ་དང་སློབ་མ་ལ་སྤྱིངས་ཡིག་གི་ཚུལ་དུ་སྤྱར་བའི་མགུར་

1. Seek out sources for Tibetan self-reflection about the forms of poetry and inspirational literature
2. Determine the trajectories of these ideas over time
3. Identify innovators and work out their networks of influence
